

Patterns

Synopsis

That the mind, consciousness or self is like a blowing wind or flowing stream.

Humans have evolved in recent times from not being able to conceive of mind/consciousness at all to beginning to seriously investigate whether such things might exist and in what form.

If mind is a physical structure, where might it be located in the cranium? Is it a learned pattern, a nerve network or network of networks?

This writer leans towards the label: something else.